Performing Work for Hurricane Harvey Claims - Learn How to Protect the Money You Are Owed

By Jonelle Oldacre, Associate Attorney

Generally speaking, it is a good business practice to have all of the essential terms between the parties to be put into a written agreement before the work starts. But, in a situation such as the aftermath of a hurricane, that may not always be possible to do upfront. However, it is not too late to create one - even a contract signed during construction or work performed can be enforced...
